WHY THE HUMBLE WIFE MAY SUFFER WHILE THE SELFISH ONE IS ADORED

By Beatrice Fairfax

DOROTHY DIX shows how much better it is for a woman to demand her husband's homage than to let him consider her only a sort of superior domestic who keeps the household running smoothly

The average husband will turn his back on the woman who does her own washing, and will kneel before the lady who plays princess.

By Dorothy Dix

A WOMAN asks me why the woman who spends her life waiting upon a man and working to make him comfortable is treated with less consideration and affection than the woman who makes the same man wait upon and work for her.

The answer to this conundrum is dead easy. It is because the man is human.

Every one of us, men and women, alike, looks down upon slaves and up to queens.

Humility is a virtue that we praise with our lips and regard with contempt in our hearts.

It is a fact that redeems to our credit, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that in this world people are rewarded not according to their deserts, but according to their demands. We get what we insist upon having.

If we are satisfied, with little, little we are contented, and we receive much.

This includes even love. We lay out our best offerings of affection not before the one of whose unrequited devotion and faithfulness and loyalty we have had a thousand proofs, but at the feet of the one of whom we feel certain, when we desire to please, and who demands a continued burning of incense.

Is Trosset Upon

YOU may find this illustrated about you every day. Who does not know the meek, mild, adoring wife who is perfectly happy just to be allowed to worship some big brute of a man, who smokes her and ignores her, and only occasionally throws her a kind word as one might toss a bone to a hungry dog.

Who does not know the patient, self-sacrificing, self-denying wife who trails along in his wife's wake, telling

By Dorothy Dix

In a hot office in the Summer that she departs hereafter, at fashionable summer resorts, dressing in hand-made gowns that she may wear lace and diamonds, asking nothing else of fate but the privilege of ministering to her vanity and ease?

Whether it is the woman who prostrates herself before the man or the man who prostrates himself before the woman, the result is invariably the same.

The one on the ground gets trodden upon.

It is very sad, but quite inevitable under the circumstances, and the only remedy for the situation is to get up.

A Common Case

THIS case is not an uncommon one. Every one of us can match it with a hundred others, and the explanation of it seems to be the old one, that we do not value what we have, and desire only that which is hard to get.

Without doubt the woman who is all set about with home possessions, a certain pliancy for man. She arouses in him the same alluring, sense of danger that hazardous adventures and risky sports arouse. In addition she is a challenge to his pride, for at bottom every man, fancies himself a conqueror, and every man who is a conqueror, will fight to the death.

On the other hand, the woman who is too fond and faithful is like a book that one knows by heart.

She may be all that is good, and sweet, and dear, but there are no thrills in her society. A man does not have to make any effort to please her, because she will be pleased with what ever he does.

Knowledge is good enough for her—and she gets nothing.

Any kind of nothing else in life as peculiar as that a good woman cannot treat her husband as she would like to without ruining him. It is the nature of women to wish to serve and sacrifice themselves for those they love.

There is not a wife in the world who does not know this.

Very Easy to Lose

SHIRLEY likes to fetch his slippers to the door, and to get them out of the way, to put the buttons on his shirt, and to do a thousand other little personal services.

She also finds a keen delight in doing without something she really needs to buy him a luxury, and to brood over him with a passion of protecting motherhood that makes him just her biggest boy; but I defy any woman to put these tactics into actual operation for five years without waking up some morning to the realization that if she hasn't lost her husband's respect, she has lost his consideration.

He is fond of her perhaps, but she has degenerated in his eyes into nothing but an upper servant, a sort of household engine that keeps the domestic machinery running smoothly for his benefit.

He does not appreciate what she does for him.
